In fulfilling the duties of School Committee, we have felt, in a measure, charged with the responsibility and management of the schools, and have been determined to leave no portion of our duty unperformed, unpleasant though it might be. To do this, those experienced know, requires no small amount of time and patience. Though our success has not been as great as we could wish, we have no cause for complaint.

It will be seen by the table, that there have been twenty-three terms* of school, fourteen of which have been taught by residents of the town; showing an appreciation of home talent highly commendable.

TEACHERS.

Prudential Committees were very fortunate in the selection of teachers for the Summer, and also for the Winter, with one exception. Many of them can scarcely be excelled in scholarship, dignity of deportment, purity of character, or skill and tact in teaching; all have manifested an unusual interest in their schools, and have labored faithfully for the advancement of their charge; and only in one case has there been any very near approach to failure, though some have been more successful than others. It gives us pleasure to state that in districts where there has been any partisan feeling from any cause, the teachers have so conducted themselves and their schools, as to partially, if not quite, overcome this feeling, and be above reproach.

Examinations have all been very satisfactory, the scholars having made good progress and showing evidence of thorough instruction. Rhetorical exercises, well conducted, have in many cases added to the interest, and at the close of the second term in No. 5, the usual recess hour was occupied with an exercise in gymnastics which had been taught throughout the term.

In many of the schools prizes have been awarded to the scholars by the teachers, for meritorious conduct and proficiency in their studies, and, in turn, several teachers have received from scholars valuable tokens of love and respect.

IN THE SUMMER.

With the exception of the one in No. 9, all the teachers in the Summer had had prior experience, many of them having taught in town, and all entered upon their duties with a fair understanding of them, and the evident determination to succeed.

We were pleased in all cases, to note the attachment between pupil and teacher. On nearly every visit we found the teachers' desks decorated with boquets of flowers. In No. 2, we found also, house plants which were carefully tended by the scholars throughout the term, giving a look of cheerfulness to the room that bespoke refinement and culture. Examination days all the houses were handsomely decorated, No. 3, however, taking the lead.

IN THE WINTER.

Five of the schools were intrusted to young men, two of whom had taught before with good success, and two had never made an attempt. The others were in the hands of young ladies, of whom, two also were beginners.

SCHOOLS.

There has been an honest rivalry between the schools in some districts for the "first" position; the contest has been great and close, and is well deserving of praise, but the second term in No. 2 may be regarded as the model, as it was the largest, of the few that were nearly perfect. The teacher here, as also in No. 4, generously gave a week of school, after the money was expended. The school in No. 4 has made great advancement during the year, the parents pronouncing the second term "a perfect success." We found here a natural mathematician, a little boy named Blood, only six years old, whose ability to work with numbers seemed almost incredible in one so young. No. 6 presents the most praiseworthy example in its record of attendance, but two scholars for the year, having a mark for absence, tardiness, or dismissal; one of these, Fred P. Corning, four years of age, was absent one day only, during the Winter. An example which many older ones would do well to imitate. The Summer school in No. 11, and the Winter in No. 3, were badly broken by sickness, much to the regret of all concerned. No. 7 has been taught throughout the year, by Miss L. E. Mullins, who is deserving of special mention for having created, and kept up, an interest in the school for thirty-one weeks. In regard to the Winter school in No. 8, we had thought to "draw it mild," but as the teacher demanded "reasons in writing" why he was dismissed, for his satisfaction we will say, that finding him incompetent to govern or instruct, and incapable of commanding the respect of the school, we deemed it our duty to remove him. In his report he says, his "connections with the scholars have been most pleasant," and he "feels grateful to the parents for the assistance received from them," yet it has been clearly shown that he allowed himself to be snowballed by the boys, even during school hours, and it is a significant fact, that not one name of a parent occurs on his Register as a visitor.

It may be proper here to say, the sudden removal of said teacher naturally created quite a "breeze," and at a meeting of the citizens of the district, one man, of supposed ability and liberal mindedness, professedly well versed in the duties of School Committee, and heretofore an advocate of good discipline and thorough instruction, had the effrontery to demand our reasons for the course we had taken, as though we were amenable to him, and not empowered to act without his gracious permission. As a matter of courtesy to the District, however, we gave an account of filthy condition of the house, and the wretched manner in which the school was conducted, at our several visits; whereupon, the same individual, evidently ignoring his former theories, thereby encouraging the boys in their misconduct, cast off all restraint, and replied to us with insult and invective.

APPARATUS.

Though all our schools are tolerably well supplied with blackboards, and, with one exception, with outline maps, it is a lamentable fact that but one has a globe, one a clock, and one a dictionary. Every school should have all of these at least, and as much illustrative apparatus as practicable. The old methods of teaching are being superseded by practices new, and far superior, and the machinery of fifty years ago is inadequate for the demands of the present time.

Farmers and mechanics quickly avail themselves of any new invention for the perfection of their work, or the saving of labor, and find themselves benefited thereby; the same forethought applied in this direction, would be equally productive of good.

CLASSIFICATION.

One great fault in our schools is the multiplicity of classes; we found one teacher toiling under a load of thirty-five, and it was not an uncommon occurrence to find twenty-five or more. Who could do them justice in six hours? We tried to reduce them, and did in many cases, though we are satisfied that enough was not one in this direction. One thing is clear, we must have less classes or more teachers.

THE ATTENDANCE.

For the past year compares favorably with that of former years, but there is abundant room for improvement. In this connection we quote from the remarks of one of the teachers: "Very much is always lost in any school, by these two great evils, absence and tardiness. Such faults not only exert an injurious effect upon the individual scholar, but upon the whole school at large. It is a matter where the teacher is practically powerless, and where, as, indeed in all other particulars, the hearty co-operation of every parent is needed to secure the largest amount of success and benefit." Nor is the interest of parents in schools, judging from the "record of visits," as great as it should be. To any intelligent citizen we would say, it is not only your privilege, but your duty, to visit our schools and their teachers, and see for yourself what they are. It is not well to neglect this, though you may have perfect confidence in the teacher, nor have you any right to judge a teacher by hearsay evidence.

TEXT-BOOKS.

The following is a complete list of the text-books now in use, no change having been made during the year. Reader—Hillard's Series; Grammar—Quackenbos; History—do.; Philosophy—do.; Geography—Guyot's, Colton & Fitch's, and Warren's series; Penmanship—Potter and Hammond's; Arithmetic—Greenleaf's series, Colburn's and Emerson's mental; Algebra—Robinson's; Geometry—Davies'; Speller—Worcester's.

SCHOOL-HOUSES.

The school house in No. 10 has been moved and repaired, at an expense of $600, making it as commodious as any in town. The District has long felt the need of a good house, and the movement was a wise one. There are yet a few almost unfit for their purpose, but as the citizens of the districts owning them, have expressed regret at their condition, and a determination soon to improve them, we forbear further comment.

Every thing about a school-room should be as pleasant and attractive as possible, for this is the place where the young mind is trained, and too much care cannot be taken to keep it in the right direction. A good spacious, modern school-room is an article much to be desired, and one highly appreciated by all (except, perhaps, in one case where the "bump of destructiveness" seems to be fully developed).

CONCLUSION.

In making our report, we have deviated somewhat from the prescribed course, and, perhaps have not spoken of some teachers as much as they, or their friends, think we ought, but as all worked so hard and were so successful, we thought it hardly necessary to particularize; a word of commendation, however, is due the beginners, for their untiring efforts in the school-room, and for the success that has in all cases crowned their labors.

Our personal thanks are due the Prudential Committee, teachers, scholars and patrons, for their uniform kindness, courtesy and co-operation.

The above with the following list of names is respectfully submitted.
